

"Patriotism is the last refuge of the scoundrel."

Samuel Johnson embodies the 18th Century love of directness, usually in a prose balancing parallel structures of polished art. But he's no prophet of our frame, so doesn't get the understatement in this particular utterance.